[Correspondence of the National Republican.] Los Common, Cod., August 21, 1874. I wrote you last from Pueblo, just on the eve of he departure of the main party of this expedi-ion for the field of its operations, all the other having gone forward, including Lieut, Whipple and five men from the main party, who pursued a separate route to Fort Garland. On he ath we packed the mules and donkeys, loaded e wagons, and left our camp for Fort Garland and the regions west and south of that point. The thermometer took its accustomed advantage and went up above par; the mules were not used to packs; the men were not intimately acquainte sa, and a mile south of the city, we might have asked, with Tenuyson-"Is there confusion in the ttle fele ?" and added, not quite in his words, The mules," not "the gods," "are hard to reconile. "Tis hard to settle order once again." The train scattered in all directions except the one in which it was projected, and packs changed from e backs to the bellies of the snimals. The cook refused to aid more scientific gentlemen to bring the train back into column, and an officer of the the St. Charles river, which is at this season about

One can here look over a hundred miles of loneliness and the occasional ranches on the streams sug-gest a perpetual Sunday lariness. Occasionally a bird is seen, prairie dogs larger than those along the line of the Kansas Pacific road sit up straight by their holes and bark, or a jack abbit runs away and leaves you in expectation that he will have to stop until his ears catch up with him. In 1805, Lieutenant, afterwards General Pike, father of the gentleman of that name and rank, and so well known in Washington, and to Masons generally, commenced explorations in the West, which he continued several years, when he was called by the extrapocles of the war with Great Britain into diff.

There are marks of glacial action in the Wet mountains The Grayback placer diggings, new worthless, are in the east foot hills of Mount Baldy, and were worked by Mexicans, and last by Kit Carson. The path pursued by the party was, at times, very difficult, and for miles a way had to be cut through the quaking aspens, (populus and reports as worthy of notice in botany a pro fusion of camponula rotundifotis and tormentilla erecta, and soledago virganres, lenum perenna and wild onion.
